Huascar

She was a career woman!

The last thing she wanted to do was to tie herself down with the constraints of marriage; but still, her biological clock kept ticking. With all this in mind, Marie set out to explore the possibility of adoption.

Successful in her business life, stable in her personal life, affluent and strong-willed, Marie was a happy woman – except for that annoying clock.

So, Marie threw herself into researching adoption agencies and after many months of applying and interviewing, she was able to adopt an infant son.

Marie was delighted. As she bonded with her new baby boy, Marie marvelled at the many rewards of motherhood – so much so in fact, that it wasn't long before Marie felt a longing to have a daughter. Again, she threw herself into the world of adoption agencies. This time however she found a brother and sister (twins) who needed a home. Since they were twins and still toddlers, she applied to adopt both of them and was granted the opportunity.

Everything went well with her new expanded family for many years.

Then one day Marie heard her daughter complain, "You always treat the boys better than you do me."

Initially Marie paid no attention to the complaint, but as the same complaint came up time and time again, Marie began to wonder.

"Am I really harder on her than I am on the boys?" she wondered.

As she began to pay closer attention to her own actions, Marie reluctantly had to admit that her daughter was right. She found herself being much stricter and more demanding on her daughter than she was on either of her two sons. Angry with herself and her own actions, Marie promised herself that from this moment forward, she was going to treat all her children equally!

Much to her dismay, however, Marie found out that saying it and doing it were two very different things. As hard as she tried, she could not seem to treat the girl the same way she treated the boys.

When Marie arrived at our office with this problem, we worked through the typical family dynamic issues to no avail. There did not seem to be any apparent reason for her unequal treatment of her children, so we decided to take a different approach and dig deeper.

It was a past-life journey that garnered an almost immediate hit. What we found was a lifetime where Marie was the daughter of an incredibly demanding mother; and it had everything to do with survival.

"Girls are expendable!" You must perform at a higher level than the boys or your life is in danger. It's not fair, but that's just the way it is!" warned her mother.

All during the past-life session, Marie's fear was palpable. Even after we brought her back to the present, Marie could remember an overwhelming, intense fear. This fear felt so familiar that it unravelled another element for Marie.

"I didn't really know it, but now I understand that whenever I'm being hard on my daughter, my underlying emotion was always fear."

Once the connection to this past-life experience was made, Marie had other "aha" moments about other behaviours she was exhibiting in her current life.

With her new awareness intact, Marie's work with Huascar "to shed what no longer serves" was the easy part. One 10 Day Boot Camp to negotiate a break from this past-life issue and Marie's life was dramatically improved.
