Pilnytis

It took a past-life regression and work with Pilnytis directly to unravel the truth for Ray.

Ray was unhappy. He wanted friends but he just didn't know how to make them. He was the owner/operator of a successful retail business with several different profit centres and more than a hundred employees. From Ray's perspective the people who worked for him feared him, possibly respected him, but he was relatively certain none of them liked him.

"What makes you say that?" I asked.

"They scatter whenever I come around. They never look me in the eye and none of them even bother to make conversation with me." he replied.

"Why would they be scared of you?" I asked.

"They're probably worried about their jobs."

I tipped my head waiting for clarity.

"Well, I don't tolerate any laziness or inefficiency and they know it. I built up that business from scratch and I want things done my way because I know my way works."

"What about outside of your work? What's your social life like?" I queried.

"I don't really have one. I think I make people uncomfortable. I think my expectations of people are just too high." he said sadly.

"What do you expect of people?"

"I really can't stand stupidity and any sign of laziness makes me crazy." he said very matter-of-factly.

Something told me that this was 'past-life' stuff, so I opted for a regression.

It only took a few minutes for Ray to slide into the past life in question. I was fascinated.

It turned out that this wasn't the first time that Ray was a very successful businessman. The only difference I could gather from his description of what he was seeing was that in this lifetime he managed the business for his father – a cruel, ruthless man – who cared more about money than he did about Ray, or anyone else for that matter.

Seeing the connection, I decided to introduce The Archetype Pilnytis, The Slavic God of Wealth directly into the regression.

When Pilnytis showed Ray how he had imprinted off his father and had come to believe that the way to succeed in business was to be demanding, the correlation between that lifetime and this one was obvious.

Then Pilnytis, surprised even me.

He shared with Ray a true key to success. He showed Ray images that suggested the following:

“Do everything differently!
Challenge every old out-dated rule.
Question any limitation you perceive.
In this way you’ll truly be a leader and a pioneer.”

When I brought Ray back to the present, we spent the next hour talking about how he wanted to change things at work. He was excited he could barely contain himself. He wanted to begin right away. He could hardly wait to include his employees in his new vision and share his recent experience and awareness with them.

I’m not certain how it worked out as I have not seen Ray since then – but I truly hope his excitement and enthusiasm for change came to life.
